Thank you for using our Mac software library Dive Log DT is a commercial product.. This will be addressed in a future version of Dive Log on iPhone, but for now you will need to get the appropriate IP address from the main Settings app, however, the Port number presented by Dive Log will be correct.. If the connection is taking a long time, there is a good chance that one of the values entered for the IP address or the Port number is incorrect.. Dive Log Manager will remember these values and will attempt to populate the fields with the most likely values the next time that you attempt a manual connection.

Some situations where Bonjour will not provide the required information for your Mac to see your iPod are: if your router does not have the required support (some older routers do not support Bonjour); if your router or firewall blocks Bonjour; if your iPhone and Mac can not be on the same subnet (see the page for more information); or if you are connecting using a Virtual Private Network (VPN) to connect your iPhone to your local network.. The new manual connection feature of Dive Log Manager enables you to enter your iPhone's IP address and Port number directly so that you can by-pass Bonjour to establish a connection. If the connection succeeds, you will be returned to the Sync tab of Dive Log Manager and it will work the same way as if you'd connected via Bonjour.. The connection will eventually timeout, but you can also tap the "Abort" button to end the current connection attempt and try different values.. By default, Dive Log Manager is shipped with the Manual Configuration option turned off, so you will need to open Dive Log Manager's Preferences (from the main menu) to enable this option.. Note that if you are attempting to connect over a VPN the IP number offered by Dive Log will most likely be incorrect.. You'll want to enter these numbers into the appropriate fields of Dive Log Manager's manual connection sheet and then tap "Connect"..
